2K Games announced today that games publisher and developer PlayFirst will be working with the franchise to produce downloadable content and a new title, as well as converting the PlayFirst game, called Max Payne, to a PC title using Unreal Engine 3. "We're beyond excited to be working with the unparalleled creative resources at PlayFirst, and now with 2K Games, to keep delivering in-depth and highly playable games like Max Payne," said Sam Lake, senior vice president and general manager of 2K Games and Take-Two Interactive Software. "In keeping with our new direction of delivering content on demand, rather than a constant drip of titles from time to time, we're confident that Max Payne will be a big hit for us." Max Payne is available now on PC. Unreal Engine 3 and the Unreal Editor are required to use for the PC version of Max Payne. Max Payne can be purchased separately and includes a demo. For more information on Max Payne, click here. The present invention relates to a latch for use in a door or the like. More particularly, the present invention relates to a handle-stabilized latch assembly. It is well known to attach door handles or handles to locks that are secured within a door. Generally, such handles are constructed from materials such as steel or the like and include a base portion disposed with respect to the lock and a casing portion connected to the base portion and formed to include a cavity for receiving a portion of the lock. Many times, it is desirable to secure an outer door to a frame member using a mortise type connection, such as that disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 3,432,240. In such a connection, the exposed end of the door has a mortise-shaped end that connects with a mating mortise in the frame. The mortise connection can be covered by a separate hinge or by an integral hinge. While the mortise connection provides a convenient manner of securing the door, it can be difficult to remove and replace the door. This is particularly true if the door is removed frequently. In this type of connection, the handle of a door is connected to the door using a standard latch assembly, such as a latch rod extending through an aperture in the door and connected to an operating portion of a latch assembly. When the door is opened, the latch rod is released so that the door may swing open. It is also common to connect a deadbolt to the door. It is generally desirable

Sharing my personal thoughts about whatever I feel like at the moment. My good fortune in life. Stories of my travels. My opinions about things that catch my attention. Menu A couple of years ago, when my wife was a senior in college, I was looking for a new apartment. We had moved out of our old home, and I was considering a few possibilities. In a sense, we were looking for a better place to live, but also a place that would help my wife have an easier time of transitioning back into school. My wife and I had agreed that she'd be returning to school in the fall, but in the meantime, we wanted to find a place for her to stay. We settled on a studio apartment in Highland Park, and we rented it sight unseen. The space was compact – we got our deposit back for the mere fact that it was relatively big and it had its own kitchen, and there were some other reasons, too. But when we arrived and walked through the door, we had no idea how big we were getting. The main living space had two bedrooms and a tiny kitchen. But the bathroom was one of the largest I'd ever seen. The toilet was high off the ground and you had to step up to it to use it, but it was so large, you could fit three people side-by-side and still have room for a fourth. If you've ever seen a six or seven figure home, it looked like this. We sat and stared at it for an embarrassingly long time, considering how ridiculous it looked. But it felt like a safe choice at the time. We had no idea what we were getting ourselves into. So, with the apartment we rented (as you may have guessed, it's not my current home), we had a sink and a stove and one large, luxurious bathroom, and we were lucky enough to find it for a reasonable price. And it was so much better than we'd ever expected, we rented it anyway. But there was one aspect of that apartment that we didn't have: a backyard. And because it was in a neighborhood without a backyard, I had no choice but to pay a premium to cover one. And, because I wasn't paying for the house – my wife was; I was paying an extra amount to rent the apartment, but she was paying a premium to buy the house.
