I'm guessing the way to do this is to either: Explicitly import a style-sheet (reference the URL or code) Add/remove an attribute (like.preview { display: none; }) in the head of the document But I just want to make sure I'm not reinventing the wheel. Edit: Thanks for all the good answers, I'm accepting @Langdon's answer because of the following: I'm more or less interested in knowing whether or not there's a way to do this if I'm using Greasemonkey. If the answer is yes and I'm not using Greasemonkey, I appreciate the input, though. A: From the title of your question, I'm assuming you just want to display an element with a class of preview or to display one that doesn't have that class. Display the element as the page loads with:

document.getElementsByClassName("preview")[0].style.display = "none"; Or use jQuery: $('.preview').css('display', 'none'); If you just want to toggle the element, use toggleClass(): $('.preview').toggleClass('preview'); El presidente de México, Andrés Manuel López Obrador, anunció que este domingo luego de terminar el primer foro ordinario de la segunda fase del trabajo del fideicomiso Inmobiliario Nacional, el Instituto Nacional de la Propiedad Estructurada (Inpe) inicia la reforma del ISSSTE. A: This is perfectly normal behavior. You're asking an HTTP server to download a file so you can open it in the browser. The browser has no way of knowing what kind of file you've asked it to download, so it simply downloads it as a text/html. If you need to download a specific file type (e.g..pdf), then you have to save the file locally and have your browser automatically open it. Does home exercise affect systolic/diastolic blood pressure? The CARE study. The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of home exercise on the blood pressure of sedentary elderly patients with a diagnosis of isolated systolic hypertension and to examine the association between home exercise and treatment compliance. Subjects were randomly assigned to one of four groups: (1) an experimental group, receiving supervised exercise, (2) an unsupervised home-walking exercise group, (3) an unsupervised home-stretching exercise group, or (4) a control group. Data on blood pressure and compliance were obtained after the intervention and the conclusion of the study. Compliance data were available for 109 subjects. Systolic and diastolic blood pressures were lower in the experimental group compared to the control group (p When the future world's greatest democracy: three months earlier, that decisive moment in Philadelphia had empowered delegates from nearly every American colony to choose George Washington to succeed the British king. That first president would have been a worrying portent for his presidency, 1789 also saw Washington write a letter to his close friend Thomas Jefferson that launched a storm of controversy and baffled posterity. Drawing on his letter to Randolph on their last night in Alexandria, Washington wrote to his fellow Virginian about his slave Sally Hemings, whom he had fathered a child with
